Weakened Vitality
Impoverished Blood

Read what Ayer's Sarsaparilla did for a well-known city missionary, who writes:

"I was for many years a sufferer from boils and other eruptions of a like nature, caused by the impoverished state of my blood. My appetite was poor and my system a good deal run down. Knowing the value of

AYER'S
Sarsaparilla

by observation of the good it had done to others, I began taking it. My appetite improved almost from the first dose; then my general health improved, and now it is excellent. I feel a hundred per cent. stronger, and I attribute this result to Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I recommend with all confidence as the best blood medicine ever devised."

As now made, Ayer's Sarsaparilla contains no alcohol.

There are many imitation Sarsaparillas.

Be sure you get "Ayer's."

Passing Of World's Most Renowned Sculler

The following story appeared in the Toronto Daily Star. It is a very interesting article, telling, as it does of first-hand encounters with the great sculler. Hanlan rowed in Honolulu in 1884 and many of the old timers here will remember the race:

With the death of Edward Hanlan at 1 o'clock this morning from pneumonia passed the greatest sculler that ever sat in a boat. As his friends used to say, he taught the whole world the art of sculling. His advent in the sport revolutionized the style of rowing, inasmuch as he proved that it required something more than brute strength to get speed out of a shell.

Hanlan was no paper champion. He was his country's idol, and always true to his friends and the people, who adored him. He always gave his best, and he went around the globe seeking fresh worlds to conquer. Numbers of times during his long and brilliant career Hanlan was tempted with fabulous offers, but he never fell.

Hanlan in his prime never had an equal as an oarsman, either among his contemporaries, his predecessors, or his followers. In Hanlan's day there were more first-class scullers than at any other period in the history of rowing. It was the climax of sculling, and not a regatta in America, but could gather together from 15 to 20 men, and all of decidedly more than ordinary ability. Indeed, any one of these men at his best could easily take care of the champions of today. It was an age of champions, and Ned Hanlan was the king of them all. None ever beat him, and he beat them all.

Professional boat-racing in Hanlan's time was at the height of its popularity the world over. The newspapers gave pages of space to the training reports of the men engaged in the big matches, and thousands traveled long journeys to the scene of the decisive events. The crowd that congregated on one occasion at one of the Toronto banks, clamoring to have its money cabled to England to back "the boy in blue," was so great that the doors of the bank were broken in, and an extra force of police had to be hurried down to give the clerks a chance to get the volume of business straightened out.

The Trickett Race

In this connection H. J. P. Good, the dean of Canadian sporting writers, at that time sporting editor of the Mail tells a story that will illustrate the interest Torontonians took in the doings of the great sculler. It was in reference to the race for the world's championship with Edward Trickett on the Thames—that Mr. Good speaks as follows:

"The morning of Monday, November 15, 1880, was the day set for the race, and, as might have been expected, tremendous excitement ensued in Britain, in Australia, in the United States, and in Canada. Never before had a sculling match created so much interest, and never since has one done so. All the world was practically agog, and every daily paper of prominence on this continent each morning contained cablegrams detailing the progress made in training by the contestants.

"The betting was heavy, never any thing like it, and the writer of this was in the thick of it, although he never left Toronto. And thereby hangs a tale. It was on the Monday night prior to the race, or on November 8, 1880, that a cablegram reached Toronto saying that, at the final deposit, set then to be made, 'Leviathan' Thompson, who was behind the Australian, had offered to bet a thousand pounds that his champion would win. The cablegram stated that the Canadian declined the bet."

Hundreds of dollars were subscribed and Mr. Good cabled it to T. B. Whitefoot, editor of the London Sportsman. On the Saturday before the race Mr. Good was overwhelmed with money. He adds:

Arrived at the bank, I threw it out on the counter. But the crowd that had gathered in the street was so great that the bank doors had to be closed, and then the pounding was so vigorous that the bank officials commanded the receiver to leave. Consequently the money was placed in a great big silk handkerchief, and escorted by E. S. Cox and a bank official, was taken over to the top story of the American Hotel, which then stood where the Board of Trade building stands now, and there counted. What the exact figure was is lost to memory, but at any rate the amount received back was $60,313.42.

At first the money was placed at odds-on; then Australian money came in so readily that some was invested at events, but Canadian money just poured in, with the result that the final betting was 10 to 4 and 10 to 3 on Hanlan. As has been said, the race was rowed Monday morning at 8 o'clock. On the Sunday night previous, at 9 o'clock, this cablegram was received from Mr. Whitefoot: "£25,000 ($25,000) uninvested; what shall I do with it?" The answer flashed back was, "Get it on at any odds," and it was got on, although Canadian money that went over with Hanlan's caretaker, who was also steward of the Toronto Rowing Club, was returned uninvested. At great cost Mr. Whitefoot hired tugs to go up and down the river to interview the occupants of the following steamers, and it was then that, the Australian money running out, the odds on Hanlan went up to the closing figures already given.

"Although no arrangements had previously been made for the transaction, bettors expected to be paid instantly after the result became known or within a day or two at most, but the money was not forthcoming. Mr. Whitefoot, the agent-in-chief in England, went away for a holiday immediately after the race. Cablegram after cablegram several times a day were sent to ascertain his whereabouts, but without result. Meantime all kinds of stories were in circulation—that Mr. Whitefoot had gone to Spain, where he would be joined by 'yours truly,' and so on."

Not a word further came from London until, Friday, Saturday and Sunday having elapsed, Monday came round. The sender, saying to his wife, "I have done no wrong. I will face them," got out of bed, dressed, and was in the act of lathering his face when the street door was opened and a bank official rushed in with the joyful cry: "The money's here, Good; the money's here!" and then Good knew nothing for some moments. The money had been cabled to Toronto the very first minute it could be got past the clearing-house.

Then came the paying off, and if the sender, with some savage glee, watched check-holders running to the bank, he can be forgiven. And the same check-holders did not then realize how near they came to losing their money, for it is told that after passing Hammersmith Bridge, Hanlan appeared to be "done," and paused. His coach, one John or Jacob Bright, a north countryman, who, as usual in England, accompanied his man in an eight, looked around with dismay, but, seeing that the Australian was in the same plight, excitedly shouted, "Come on, you! The big 'un's beat; the big 'un's beat!" Hanlan responded, and won by a couple of lengths. But it was a close shave for that $60,500.

HANLAN'S BRILLIANT CAREER

Ned Hanlan was born at Hanlan's Point, Toronto Island, on July 14, 1855, and is consequently only 52 years of age today. He stood 5 feet 10 and weighed 217 pounds when he died. In his rowing days his normal weight was around 165, and his rowing weight 150.

A summary of his principal races will give some notion of the wonderful skill of Hanlan as a sculler.

1874—Aug. 10: Beat Loudon and Pattullo on Burlington Bay for Ontario championship.

1875—Sept. 1: Beat Loudon at Toronto for Ontario championship.

1876—Aug. 16: Beat McCann at Toronto for Ontario championship.

Sept. 4, 5, and 6: Beat, at the Centennial in Philadelphia, 15 picked professionals in the world in two heats and a final at three miles in 21.01, the fastest time up to that date. Among his old and seasoned competitors were: Higgins, ex-champion of England; Morris, champion of America; Plaisted, McKean, Ward, and John Smith.

1877—June 31: Beat Wallace Ross on the Kennebecasis for the Canadian championship at five miles.

July 1: Beat the best scullers in America at a regatta at Brockville.

July 4: Beat Plaisted and Kennedy at Cape Vincent, N. Y.

Oct. 14: Beat Ross at Toronto for Canadian championship.

1878—May 15: Beat Plaisted at Toronto.

June 20: Beat Morris at Pittsburg for American championship.

Aug. 12: Beat Ross, Morris, Berry, Luther, McCann, Elliott, and others at a regatta at Barrie.

1879—April 3: Beat Hawden on the Tyne, England.

June 16: Beat Elliott on the Tyne for the championship of England.

Aug. 15: Rowed dead heat with Riley at regatta at Barrie, after being fouled by Elliott.

Oct. 16: Beat Courtney at Chataqua, Courtney's boat having been sawed.

1880—May 19: Beat Courtney at Chataqua.

May 23: Beat Riley on Potomac.

June 17: Lost regatta on Potomac, being obliged to quit through a stitch in his side, Ross, Riley, Ten Eyck, and Gaudaur finishing in that order.

Nov. 15: Beat Trickett on Thames for the English championship cup, which was turned over for the world's championship. This trophy, having been won three times, is now in Hanlan's home, but the £100 that went with it has flown.

1881—Feb. 14: Beat Laycock on Thames.

1882—April 3: Beat Boyd on the Tyne.

May 1: Beat Trickett on Thames.

On his return home he was matched to row Ross at Winnipeg, but that foe of all athletes, typhoid, closed his career for that year. Twice he was given up as hopeless.

1883—May 31: Beat Kennedy at Boston.

June 15: Beat Ross, Gaudaur, Teemer, Hosmer, McKay, Lee, and others at a regatta at Pullman, Ill.

June 20: Won regatta at St. Paul with America's best taking part.

Aug. 18: Beat Ross at Ogdensburg.

Aug. 25: Beat Hosmer and Lee at Fulton, N. Y.

He also won a regatta at Stirling with 17 starters, and at Fall River, with 15 rowing, was swamped by the swell of a steamer. He gave exhibitions all over the United States and won in all, 23 races, including 4 or 5 doubles.

He and Lee went to the coast, where he was to row "Long" Stevenson, but the latter refused to row on the rough water. Exhibitions were given all along the coast.

1884—Late in the year 1883, having conquered all on this side of the hemisphere, Hanlan sailed for Australia, giving an exhibition on the way at Honolulu before a vast concourse of people.

June 22: Beat Laycock on Nepean. Beat Edwards twice.

Arrived at Sydney, N. S. W., Saturday, March 15, and on Monday was given a grand reception. He gave exhibitions at Melbourne before 40,000 people, at Ballarat, Brisbane, Hooperstown, Launceston, Auckland, Sydney, Walla Wago, Cockatoo Island, and Western Australia, his tour extending from May 22 to the middle of July.

On Aug. 16, 1884, he was beaten for the first time since the beginning of his career by William Beach on the Parramatta River for the world's championship. Beach refused to row him a week later. Eventually the Australian beat him again, but it was not the old Hanlan.

Hanlan's career may be said to have closed on that Aug. 16, on the Parramatta, though he did row several races, continuing as late as 1896, when he beat Hackett, and incidentally won seven races of all kinds that year.

"Packy" McFarland declares that Bert Keyes is the most awkward fighter he ever met. He says it was impossible to get home a straight punch and that when he saw what a "mut" Bert was he didn't try very hard to stop him, fearing that he might put his hands out of commission.

America's Best Athletes
Selected By An ExpertOnly Seven Of Fifty-three Men Chosen Were Members Of Team That Won Championship At Athens

Martin A. Delaney, the athletic director of the Kansas City Athletic Club, who excels at track and field work, makes the prediction that the team that will be selected to represent the United States in the Olympic games to be held in London next July will be 50 per cent. stronger than the band of athletes that won the championship at Athens in 1896.

Delaney attributes this great improvement to the collegians who will make the team and to the system of tryouts for selecting the athletes. There probably will be three tryouts, one in New York, one in Chicago, and perhaps one on the Coast. These meet will weed out all the athletes but the stars.
